— THRIPS —

Did your Glads fail to bloom last summer and the buds look brown and as if burned, perhaps by the heat?

If so, it is "Dollars to Doughnuts" that it was the new pest which made its appearance only two summers ago, (first, I understand in Canada) and is rapidly spreading, already having appeared in many sections.

It never even had a name until last Jan. (1931), but now many growers know it by its first name, at least the last half of it.

Not much has been said about it so far, but I for one do not believe in ignoring it.

When it gets a foothold on growing stock there seems to be no way to completely eradicate it. But, by proper and sufficient spraying, it can be held in check.

The first evidences of its presence is a whitening of the leaf fibre in small patches, usually extending parallel to the ribs of the leaves, where they have scuffed the surface, causing an exudation of the juices, which they suck up, move a little and repeat.

What makes the sprays ineffective in eradicating it, is that when the eggs are to be laid, the adult gets into the crevice of the leaf, where the new growth has pushed its way through, and then crawls as far up as possible between the sealed edges, and there the young are hatched, where no spray can possibly reach them. Eggs hatch in from one to four days and a few days more are fully developed. When first hatched look like tiny specks to the naked eye, semi-transparent, then turn to light orange and almost black when fully developed and are about a sixteenth of an inch long and rather slender.

If the infestation is light, when buds start opening the petals frequently appear to be puckered around the edges, causing the flower to have a cupped appearance and the darker varieties show conspicuous white patches where they have drawn the colored chlorophyll from the petals.

If badly infested, the buds dry up and appear as if scorched and do not open at all.

The Thrips winter over largely on the bulbs, probably laying eggs as it gets cold, which on account of low temperature, do not hatch until spring and when these are planted the young hatch out and come up with the sprout and "there you are."

Do not throw away stock that has been affected, however, for, if properly treated, the blooms next year will be as good as ever, as effectually proven by the grower who had the best Glads at the A. G. S. Exhibition at Cleveland last summer.

Here is where that "ounce of prevention" is worth many gallons of cure.

A gas generated by 25% carbon tetrachloride and 75% Ethylene dichloride seems to get all the thrips and also the eggs.

This should be used in a close room or receptacle of some sort, depending of course on the quantity of bulbs one has. They should be gassed for 24 hrs. in a temperature of 70 to 85 degrees and the liquid is used at the rate of 14 pounds (about 1¾ gals.) per 1000 cubic feet of space.

This gas is said to be non-explosive, non-inflammable and non-injurious to humans, so it is safe to use, and does not injure the bulbs in any way.

It can be obtained from The Carbide & Carbon Chemical Co., No. 30 East 42nd St., New York City, and is inexpensive.

As this gas is heavier than air, having a tendency to settle down, it is best handled by saturating rolls of blotting paper and laying them over the bulbs.

For spraying I would use a solution of 2 full teaspoons of Nicotine sulphate 40% (50% is better if you can get it), 5¼ teaspoons "Goulac" (Grasselli Chemical Co., Cleveland, O.), and ½ oz. Arsenate of lead to 1 gallon of water.

Mix Goulac with water first, then Nicotine and add Arsenate after dissolving thoroughly in small quantity of warm water. The Arsenate can now be had in green powder instead of white and this will not show on the foliage as the white does.

Spray as soon as the Glads are up two or three inches and watch. If any thrips should appear spray whenever you can see any on the foliage. Sometimes you will not see any at all and perhaps in an hour or so there will be many.

Should your stock become infested, go after them hard. Spray every three or four days, watching to do it at times when they will be feeding on the surface.

NOW HERE IS THE POINT

Last fall and spring a number of the growers who had infested stock, some, perhaps without realizing it, sent bulbs all over the country and from these, others which were stored with them, became infested, spreading the pest where it had never shown before.

Every Bulb I take up will be gassed before going into the Bulb Cellar. And every bulb I send out will be free of the pest.

The Ohio State Agricultural Experiment Station, which has conducted all their field experimental work at my place this year and will supervise the gassing, will also make examinations at intervals throughout the storage period and we will thus make assurance doubly sure.

If you are sure you had no thrips this past season, make certain that you get no infested stock to contaminate yours, and if you have seen evidences of it on your own stock, either treat it as suggested or burn it and get a fresh stock of bulbs which you know have been gassed and gassed properly.

Take no chance of getting this bug into your garden. Buy Bulbs which are guaranteed to have been gassed.
